On the weekend of April 21, 2012, six students attended the Princeton University Moot Court tournament. At these competitions, students play the part of attorneys who are arguing a case in front of the Supreme Court. In teams of two, students must argue the merits or faults of lower court rulings, citing case law and explaining to the Court how they should interpret the law based on the facts of the case.

This year, 122 teams of two from all along the eastern seaboard competed, many of whom came from schools which have been participating in moot court for years. The team of Dan Goldfield & Ryder Scott and David Turpin and Alain Xiong-Calmes made the round of 16. The team of Victoria Hammit and Dan Ziring advanced to the round of eight, where they lost by a very narrow margin.